

A KNIGHT & HIS FOUR FIGHTING SONS.

Sir Josiah Symon.

2nd Lieut. Charles J.B. Symon      Lieut. Oscar Sturt Symon.
 2nd Lieut. Carrill H.N. Symon      Sub Lieut. Oliver J.L. Symon, R.N.

Sir Josiah Symon, K.C., who recently celebrated the 70th anniversary of a birthday, is the father of four members of His Majesty's fighting forces. In order of seniority they are—Second-Lieut. Charles J. B. Symon (Second Battalion of the Coldstream Guards); Lieut. Oscar Sturt Symon (B Coy., 1st Anzac Cyclist Battalion of the A.I.F.); Second-Lieut. Carrill H. N. Symon (South Lancashire Regiment); Sub-Lieut. Oliver J. L. Symon, R.N., in one of the latest destroyers H.M.S. Penn, which the Germans lyngly claimed to have sunk when she was picking up the survivors of the light cruiser Nottingham after the attempt of the German Fleet to come out on August 19. Miss Eleanor D. J. Symon, daughter of Sir Josiah Symon, left this month to join her sister, who has been engaged in war work in England since the war began. This family has done its duty handsomely, and helped to maintain the best traditions of the British race.

EIGHT HOURS DAY: THE PROCESSION.

Shorn of its customary holiday accompaniments, the celebration of Eight Hours Day in Adelaide on Wednesday, October 11, lacked something of its ordinary significance. The true "flavour" of the day was absent, and there were not in the streets those surging crowds of former years which have distinguished the occasion. Last year the celebration was merged into Anzac Day, and but for the fact that the leaders of the movement desire the character of the day to be preserved, not even the pageant—the sole distinguishing event this year—would have been held. Our photograph shows the procession passing along King William Street.