Year 10 Student

An excerpt from 'Dulce decorum est, pro patria mori' by Kenneth Scott

"...Home, school, and country, all have been his care, His pride, his daily joy, his life, his soul:

Now can the soul that shed such influence there

Augment its power while endless aeons roll

One of God's saints has found his right abode...".

K.S Scott, 'Dulce decorum est, pro patria mori', 1917

The Latin words, 'Dulce decorum est, pro patria mori' are most commonly interpreted as 'It is sweet and proper to die for one's country'. This phrase is not an unusual reference to World War I as it appears in numerous poems, as does it on our school's emblem [see Figure 1]. This above excerpt is written in honour of Lieutenant Wilfrid Oswald Jose, an old scholar of St Peter's College. The latter of Wilfrid's service in World War I is situated in northern France. In early 1916, the Australian Imperial Force (AIF) and other divisions joined the British Army in France and Belgium, at last arriving at the major battle theatre of war. Here on the Western Front, terrible years of sacrifice and bloodshed was only to come.

Jose was born in Ningbo, China on 25th March 1895 to Reverend George Herbert Jose and Clara Ellen Jose^{-[1]}. At 8, he migrated to South Australia upon the steamship SS Medic via Liverpool on a 70-day voyage^{-[2]}, finally arriving on 24th September as his father returned as the Anglican Dean of Adelaide^{-[3]}.

He received his education at Queens School in Oxford, England and St Peter's College in Adelaide, Australia (1905 – 1913)^{-[4]}. During his schooling years, Jose achieved honours in every examination he undertook and won several scholarships such as the Young Exhibition and various other accolades^{-[5]}.

In 1912 became a prefect and academic dux of the school, while a member of the cadets and serving in numerous in-school committees. In 1913, he became the School Captain;

played tennis, and was captain of both cricket and football teams respectively^{-[6]}

He entered Adelaide University in 1914 to undertake engineering, while pursuing his sporting interests, and also serving parttime as a Lieutenant in the 79th Infantry^{-[7]} when the war intervened^{-[8]}. He had begun Mechanical Engineering, 'Fitting and Turning I', Drawing I, Mathematics I among others^{-[9]} [as seen in Figure 4].

He was the 38th enlistee in S. Australia^{-[10]}.

Jose enlisted at Morphettville, South Australia on 19th
August 1914 and was allocated to the A Company 10th Battalion^{-[11]}. This included many former classmates including John Gordon, Tom Whyte, Phil Robin and Arthur Blackburn^{-[12]}., [see Figure 5 and Figure 6]. After training at Morphettville Racecourse, he embarked on the HMAT Ascanius from Adelaide on 20th October^{-[13]}.

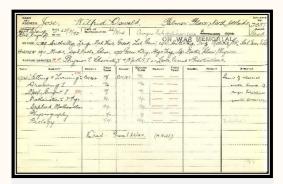

Figure 4: ^[4] Jose's student card during his brief time at the University of Adelaide. As indicated, there are no examination results for him as the Great War hindered his academic aspirations.

Wilfrid Jose is the third member of the group in the first row. Guy Fisher (third member of second row) mounted this photograph next to his shaving mirror every morning, to remind him of his fellow soldiers. Figure 6: A focus on Jose in the same image.

After training in Egypt, Jose embarked on a ship named the Ionian for the island of Lemnos in the Aegean Sea^{-[14]}. This is where the landing on Gallipoli's soil was mounted. As the first few to land on the shore, the damage they underwent was severe^{-[15]}.

Tom Whyte, who had offered to row ashore was wounded on the hip, and sadly died at sea whilst being evacuated from the boat-[16]. Soon, many of his fellow soldiers in the photo above, Figure 5, including Francis Stokes, Phil Robin and Malcolm Teesdale-Smith-[17] were each killed-[18]. In the final months of 1915, Jose contracted diarrhoea and was admitted to the 1st Field Ambulance Hospital on 26th August-[19]. On 5th December he was evacuated to Mudros with jaundice-[20] [see Figure 7 and Figure 8], yet still managed to serve for the rest of the campaign-[21]. On 9th September, he was promoted to Temporary Corporal and Corporal on 17th March

Jose, who was in the 50th Battalion arrived on 13th June at Marseilles and headed for northwestern France via train^{-[24]}. They went into the front line to relieve the 3rd Australian Infantry Brigade in the Petillion Section on 27th June^{-[25]}. During their time in the line, the soldiers conducted raids into 'No Mans-Land' and into the front line of the German trenches, to investigate which of the enemy units were opposite them^{-[26]}.

Wilfrid was promoted to Lieutenant on the 10th

July 1916 for his service^{-[27]}. During this time, the Battle of Fromelles was fought with a disastrous number of casualties, equating to about 5,500^{-[28]}.

On 21st July, Wilfrid was sent to hospital with a condition known as 'ophthalmitis' affecting his left eye^{-[29]}.
Wilfrid was later evacuated to England and admitted to the 3rd London General Hospital⁻ months [see the photo in Figure 9]. In a letter by the hospital, a description of his infection is given^{-[31]} [see Figure 10]. Only two days after leaving England on 7th December, did he to re-join his unit^{-[32]}.

The 50th Battalion replaced the 20th Battalion which was responsible for the central section of the line which ran between Lagnicourt and Noreuil, overlooking Noreuil to the north^{-[33]}.

The intelligence report from of a patrol in days prior found that the enemy had been built barricades on the roads of the village^{-[34]}.

The 50th Battalion in conjunction 51st Battalion attacked the village Noreuil at 5:15 am on 2nd April 1917^{-[35]}. The 50th Battalion attacked the south east, while the 51st attacked the north. The artillery barrage caused the enemy to

"shell little"-[36], as hostile machine guns devasted the attack and resulted in substantial casualties" few places where the line was held up by machine guns troops enveloping guns with the aid of grenades and barricades^{-[38]}. At one point, the line secured themselves within 100 yards of the objective after a successful advance of over 1700-yards^{-[39]}. A day later, the perilous position of the battalion was rectified when the Germans withdrew their post at Noreuil^{-[40]}.

During the aftermath of the attack, Jose was listed as 'missing', however, a day later on the 3rd April, it was confirmed that he had been killed in action, as given in his enlistment record from the NAA^{-[41]}.

He was only 22 years of age and is at the Noreuil Australian Cemetery^{-[42]} [see Figure 13], lying beside many of his 13th Infantry Brigade (which comprised of the 49th, 50th, 51st, 52nd Battalions) comrades^{-[43]}.

Figure 13/14: [13],[14] Figure 1: photo of the Noreuil Australian Cemetery, where Jose's headstone lies. In letter to a soldier's father he was described by OC of B Company major here as "as the gallant and loveable Lieutenant Jose".

The circumstances of Jose is cited specifically in Charles Bean's post-war account, "a platoon of the enemy with a machine gun, protected by a barricade, a steep bank, and some wire, enfiladed the advance and caused many casualties^{-[44]} Lieutenants Jose and Bidstrup – the latter after emptying his revolver into the Germans were killed"^{-[45]}. Wilfrid's father G.H Jose, when completing the circular for the AWM's Roll of Honour wrote that his son had been in charge of the first wave of the attack^{-[46]}.

Suitably proud of his son, he was also certain that he was the 'young officer' in Bean's dispatch, "as found lying between 2 machinegun positions with only 1 cartridge unfired in his revolver"-[47].
